Construction Law

Public School Construction and Renovation. Public Bidding and Procurement. Loss Prevention and Defense of Errors of Omissions. Highway and Bridge Construction. Construction Bonds. Each of these segments of the construction industry requires specialized counsel to effectively and efficiently address the multitude of legal issues that invariably arise. Whether addressing construction claims, public bidding and procurement issues, project administration, or contract drafting and negotiations, the attorneys in our Construction Law Practice Group are highly experienced in handling matters arising from these disciplines, finding practical solutions to complex problems.

For over 65 years, Rhoads & Sinon has effectively served as counselors and attorneys to the participants in the construction industry, including school districts, municipal authorities, local government, private developers, sureties and bonding companies, contractors, subcontractors and material suppliers, and design professionals. The sophistication of our practice, and knowledge of issues facing the industry, enables us to focus quickly on the issues at hand, eliminating the "learning curve" facing others. Our attorneys are particularly adept at working cooperatively with in-house counsel, local counsel, and solicitors in a "special counsel" role to provide the expertise required to resolve complex construction issues.

The attorneys that practice in the Construction Law Practice Group are also experienced regarding issues of toxic mold. You can learn more about that experience at our Toxic Mold web page.
